Pearce's Leadership Saves New Mexico Jobs

Republican Party of New Mexico Chairman Monty Newman issued the following statement on the US Fish and Wildlife decision not to list the sand dunes lizard as an endangered species:

“This decision is a victory for New Mexico jobs and the families who depend on them for their livelihood. We have Congressman Steve Pearce to thank for the outcome. Because of his leadership, and his fierce advocacy for common-sense conservation measures, Washington backed off their wild-eyed and inappropriate approach to lizard preservation.

“The heavy-hand of federal regulation was stopped by Congressman Pearce and by the tremendous efforts of many community leaders in southeastern New Mexico. It is always a delicate balance between jobs, energy security for our country and environmental stewardship. The US Fish and Wildlife service turned that balancing act into a tightrope walk and Congressman Pearce walked the line, finding common ground where he could but never conceding an inch when it came to what is best for New Mexico families."

Background:

UPDATED

PEARCE: NEW MEXICANS FOUGHT, WASHINGTON LISTENED
Applauds the Decision to Save Thousands of Jobs

Washington, DC (June 13, 2012) - Today, Congressman Steve Pearce released the following statement regarding the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's announcement that the dunes sagebrush lizard will not be listed under the Endangered Species Act:

"For nearly two years, New Mexicans have fought against the unnecessary listing of the lizard," said Pearce. "They have demanded that the government base its decision on accurate science and the local protections already in place to conserve the lizard. While it was a long and emotional process, in the end, Washington listened, and the lizard will not be listed. This is a huge victory for the people who have tirelessly fought to save regional jobs and our way of life. I extend my gratitude to the New Mexicans who came to the table, and through good faith efforts, voluntarily protected the lizard's habitat."

"On both sides of the state line—in Texas and New Mexico—local and state officials, private stakeholders and conservationists put millions of dollars and acres into this balanced approach that saves both the lizard and our jobs," Pearce continued. "The conservation agreements in place to conserve the lizard are undoubtedly some of the most successful ever. The willingness of New Mexicans and Texans to conserve the habitat and species serves as a fine example of what we can do when the federal government takes input from all sides, and tries to find common ground. I am proud of the hard work that went into this effective and efficient solution, and I am pleased with today's outcome. Personally, I would like to acknowledge the efforts of the regional offices of the BLM and FWS. While we had our disagreements during this process, I hope this effort has re-enforced a strong working relationship."

Subject: Sarah Palin's email hacker is imprisoned

Sarah Palin's email hacker is imprisoned

FILED UNDER: Data loss, Law & order, Privacy

It was a computer security story that made headlines around the world, involving the private emails of a woman who could have become Vice President of the United States. And now, it's ended with a young man sent to a federal prison, hundreds of miles from his family home.

David C Kernell, the hacker who broke into Sarah Palin's personal Yahoo email account, is reported to have been sent to jail.

In September 2008, Kernell, who went by the internet handle of "Rubico", posted Palin's private emails, her online address book, and family photos on Wikileaks, and bragged that hacking into the vice-presidential candidate's Yahoo account had been child's play

When Kernell was sentenced last November, Judge Thomas Phillips said that the the son of state democratic representative Mike Kernell should serve his 366 day punishment at a halfway house, describing it as "a sufficient restriction of the defendant's liberty".

BBC News, however, reports that US government officials have intervened, and Kernell has begun serving time at federal correctional institute in Ashland, Kentucky.

That's an institution that's nearly 300 miles away from his family home in Knoxville, Tennessee.

It's a pretty miserable end to a story that has run since the height of Palin's ultimately unsuccessful campaign to become US Vice President.

Palin went on to claim to the court that the email hack paralysed her campaign to become the USA's first female vice president.

Make sure you don't make the same mistakes as David Kernell and Sarah Palin. Don't access computers and accounts that don't belong to you.

ELIZABETH, N.J. (AP) A New Jersey man who admitted stealing a valuable Internet address and selling it to a former NBA player has been sentenced to five years in prison.

Daniel Goncalves pleaded guilty in December to stealing the P2P.com domain name and selling it on the eBay auction website for $111,000. He was sentenced Friday and was ordered to pay restitution.

Goncalves was arrested in 2009 after an investigation by the State Police Cyber Crimes Unit.

He admitted illegally accessing an account belonging to the owners of P2P.com and transferring it to his account. He sold the name to former Los Angeles Lakers and Minnesota Timberwolves forward Mark Madsen, known for his uncoordinated dancing at Lakers championship celebrations. Madsen wasn't aware the domain name was stolen.

Prosecutors say the name was worth up to $200,000.

ALBUQUERQUE - Here they go again. ProgressNow, the liberal group who got caught launching a completely baseless attack against Governor Martinez in April (see: <http://www.abqjournal.com/main/2012/04/19/news/claims-against-governor-prove-wrong.html>), just shot themselves in the foot once again — this time attacking Heather Wilson.

"Radical groups like Progress Now New Mexico have demonstrated time and again that they cannot be trusted to tell the truth. This is just the latest example about the lengths to which they will go to try to smear Republicans and yet another reminder as to why New Mexicans should never trust the 'research' this group disseminates," said Republican Party of New Mexico spokesman Annaliese Wiederspahn.

ProgressNow's Pat Davis took the lobbying documents off the Wilson Watch website on Monday after being contacted by NMPolitics.net for comment, and said the organization will double check Wilson's claim.

"If this is not the same Heather Wilson, I am happy to post the correction," he said.

MESCALERO, N.M. — Gov. Susana Martinez and Native American leaders are meeting in southern New Mexico for an annual tribal-state summit.

Education, water rights and natural resources, and tribal infrastructure and economic development are among the topics for Friday's meeting at a resort hotel and casino operated by the Mescalero Apache Tribe.

A banquet was held Thursday evening for the governor and leaders of New Mexico's 22 tribes and pueblos.

A 2009 state law requires the governor to meet with tribal leaders each year in a summit to address issues of mutual concern. American Indians account for about 9 percent of New Mexico's population, according to the Census Bureau.

I just hope he now has enough time to concentrate on the details of his upcoming marriage to his teenage fiancé and locating an appropriate middle school for her to continue her education.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. - It was a resounding defeat for Bernalillo County's most notorious commissioner in Tuesday night's election. But Michael Wiener said he is launching a new type of campaign: to clear his name.

The soon-to-be former commissioner is going after the photographer and the porn site that capitalized on the now-infamous photo of Wiener in a Red Light District of the Philippines. He and his attorney are leaning towards a lawsuit.

It all poisoned the vote, according to Wiener.

"I think they voted not so much against me or for Lonnie, but just to get off the subject," Wiener said.

The photo was featured on late night talk shows, papers around the world and even led to a parody video.

However, no concrete evidence ever surfaced that the commissioner did anything wrong, much less illegal.

"It's hard," Wiener said. "My name has been dragged through the mud."

Wiener has another six months in office, and then it'll be curtains most likely for any public office.

"I don't know if politics is going to be in my future," Wiener said.

In his final months in office, Wiener said he wants to focus on a spay and neuter program for the county, as well as the Metropolitan Detention Center.

Somewhere down the line, the scandal could make for a good book or movie — something that's not lost on Wiener.

Lonnie Talbert, who took home 84 percent of the vote, won Tuesday night's primary and is running unopposed in November.

Subject: The Laura Ingraham Show

Hello, Gov. Martinez people,

I hope you're doing well. I wanted to see, if by chance, Gov. Martinez was available for a fifteen-minute interview with Laura Ingraham at 9:30am ET tomorrow?

Thank you,

Chad
